WHISPERING, SCREAMING AND MOANING

The early morning air carries a sharp chill, hinting at the approaching winter, even at this ungodly hour. Cars zip along the strip, creating a lively scene. Occasionally, a security guard can be spotted, trying to assert authority, and suddenly one rushes toward me as I snap photos with my reliable Nikon F4S, shouting nonsensically, "This is private property, hobo! Move along!"

It struck me as strange, and I must admit, I probably annoyed someone when I burst into laughter, as even someone like Little Stevie Wonder would recognize that all the homeless and drug-addled individuals are undoubtedly long gone. Many have met untimely ends, been driven out of town, or are now languishing in the Harry Reed Memorial Correctional Facility.

I've heard from whistleblowers at a certain casino, which I won't name due to their extensive legal team, that if you find yourself on the main strip early in the morning and pay attention, you can still catch the faint sounds of voices—whispers, screams, and moans—as these old ghosts drift by you, some of them still seeking spare change or a cigarette.

It's possible I'm just imagining things or having a wild flashback to those Red Curry Pancake Paste, but wasn't that old Doc Hunter? Seriously, I can picture that old guy wanting to haunt this place just to annoy the straight-laced folks and the rent-a-cops.

Anyway, I've got to run! Be Cool!
